WyFB 104th Annual Meeting
Nov. 9-11, 2023 in Cheyenne

By Kerin Clark

It Starts With You. Grassroots involvement. Policy development. Leadership. Advocacy. Membership. It all starts with the individual member joining and being involved in the Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation. That’s how it has been for 104 years and counting. You make a difference for your future by starting the conversation, starting the involvement, and starting the policy development at your local level.

Join your fellow farmers and ranchers November 9-11, 2023 at the Little America in Cheyenne for the 104th Annual Meeting of the Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation. The Farm Bureau Federation’s grassroots policy development is the strength of the Federation. Voting delegates from the county Farm Bureau Federations participate in policy discussion, elect officers and ultimately chart the policy course for the coming year. Members also enjoy networking with other farmers and ranchers, seeing old friends and making new friends. The meeting is hosted by the county Farm Bureau Federations of the Southeast District.

Conversation and a photo with a farmer. A great way to start conversations about agriculture, said Taylen Mollett, Laramie County Farm Bureau Federation volunteer, talking about the University of Wyoming Needs Agriculture event.

The first 400 fans to participate received a Wyoming Cowboys/Wyoming Needs Agriculture t-shirt. Even after the t-shirts were all distributed, fans kept coming in to the WyFB area to rope, play the Family Feud-Ag Quiz Bowl and take pictures. Roping the dummy quickly became a fan favorite of the “Ag Olympics.”

The Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation (WyFB) 10th annual “Wyoming Needs Agriculture” event gave Cowboy fans of all ages the opportunity to interact with farmers and ranchers and learn more about agriculture. The event was held during pre-game festivities of the University of Wyoming football game.

WyFB Executive Vice President Ken Hamilton testified at a Congressional Forum in Washington, D.C. regarding Endangered Species Act reform.

TheCongressional Western Caucus and House Committee on Natural Resources launched a joint ESA Working Group (Working Group) in July 2023. A Working Group forum was held September 13, 2023 in Washington, D.C. Hamilton was one of five stakeholders to speak directly about the impact of the ESA and the need for reform of the Act.

WyFB’s Ken Hamilton testified about the impacts to Wyoming and the need for ESA reform.

Sharing agriculture with Wyoming consumers

By Kerin Clark

It’s a great event to get the Farm Bureau Federation name out there and engage a variety of people in conversations about agriculture,” said Taylen Mollett, Laramie County Farm Bureau Federation volunteer, talking about the September 9 Wyoming Needs Agriculture event.

The WyFB Foundation is hosting a “Water in Wyoming” seminar the morning of Nov. 9 from 8-11 a.m. The first speaker will be Chris Brown, Senior Assistant Attorney General with the Wyoming Attorney General’s Office. Brown will discuss how interstate compacts and court decrees affect Wyoming law. The second speaker will be Wyoming State Engineer Brandon Gebhart. He will discuss Wyoming water law fundamentals and structure. The third speaker will be a staff member from the Wyoming Water Development Commission to discuss water development in Wyoming. The seminar is free and open to the public. Attendees are requested to register by emailing broes@wyfb.org

Words fail when we see the devastation of natural disasters—from wildfires to hurricanes. We watch the reports, read the headlines and pray for relief from the suffering and comfort for the hurting. And though we cannot reverse the course of the storm, we look for ways to help in its wake. In farm country and across Farm Bureau, we jump right in to support and help our family near and far. If I were to share every story of the Farm Bureau family stepping up to help those in need, that would fill pages on pages. But for now, I would like to highlight just a few examples of how this family is there for each other in times of need and to invite the generosity of anyone reading this column to assist those currently facing down disasters.

We are heartbroken for our friends in Hawaii who are rebuilding from this major wildfire in Maui. The loss from the wildfires is unthinkable, and I immediately received calls from folks wanting to know how to help. I’m proud of the approach taken by the team at Hawaii Farm Bureau, who initially urged us all to give to relief organizations addressing the immediate life-or-death needs before they eventually set up a relief fund for affected farmers and ranchers.

Hawaii’s farmers and Farm Bureau members jumped right in to help address the immediate needs in their community. One example, pineapple grower Maui Gold, began delivering pineapples along with essential items to those impacted. Though Maui Gold’s farmland was largely unscathed, much of their reservoir was destroyed in efforts to put out the fires on the island. So, despite facing their own challenges, they focused on the greater needs of others. What an inspiring example of service. While their farm and many others face uncertainty, they are still looking for ways to support and uplift their community—from volunteering in relief efforts to partnering together to provide financial support.

Hawaii Farm Bureau’s fund, administered through their foundation, will help farmers who faced losses ranging from crops and pasturesland to agricultural equipment and structures, due to the wildfires. And Farm Bureaus across the country are stepping up to lend support. For example, the Oklahoma Farm Bureau Foundation for Agriculture joined forces with the Hawaii Farm Bureau Foundation to help farmers and ranchers in need. The OKFB Foundation began calling for donations in August and just wrapped up this drive, matching County Farm Bureau and individual donations up to $5000. Now, $7000 in donations are on their way to helping farmers in Maui.

On the other side of the country, our family members in Florida are picking up the pieces from Hurricane Ian. Much of the devastation with this storm was right in the middle of rural, farm country in Northeast Florida and South Georgia. In addition to the widespread damage to homes and rural communities, hundreds of acres of vegetable crops were wiped out and tons of thousands of orchard trees were knocked down or stripped from the winds.

I have no doubt that in the weeks and months ahead, we will hear more inspiring stories of how Farm Bureau is coming together to help those recovering from disasters. Long after the headlines fade, these communities will continue the difficult journey to heal and rebuild. While we don’t know what storms may lie in the future, we can be certain that this Farm Bureau family will continue to show up and lift us all up in all seasons.

For farm relief efforts in Florida, donations can be made online or sent to: Florida Farm Bureau Women’s Fund Memo: Hurricane Ian Relief Fund P.O. Box 147030 Gainesville, FL 32614

As a member, WyFB provides you with exclusive benefits as a way to say thank you. These benefits may pay your annual membership fee many times over.

The Joint Agriculture Committee is considering a proposal to change how big game damage is calculated for lost forage. Currently, the law allows compensation for extraordinary loss of forage. Extraordinary forage loss could be defined as forage above and beyond what would typically be eaten by wildlife. This aspect has proven very difficult to substantiate. The proposal will be to compensate for all lost forage rather than extraordinary lost forage. Another proposal will compensate for lost forage where the big game herd is over the objective set by the Wyoming Game and Fish Department. The burden will likely remain with the landowner to show damage. Rules would be set by the Game and Fish Commission to work this proposal. WyFB policy supports this proposal. The details of this proposal will be worked out at the Committee’s November meeting.

The Select Water Committee has proposed adding staff to the Wyoming Attorney General’s office to work with the counties and the state on National Environmental Protection Act (NEPA). It has come to light the counties and the state do not have the expertise to answer pertinent questions concerning NEPA and if the Federal agencies are following the Act. The idea is that if the State has the expertise on staff, the courts may be used to enforce the Act. WyFB again has policy on both sides of the issue. WyFB is not in favor of growing state government but does have policy supporting making sure the federal government and its agencies follow the applicable laws.

The first Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation event that I attended was the Young Farmers & Ranchers conference in Douglas, Wyoming, in January of 2021. A friend of mine had invited me and it was well worth attending. I reconnected with people I had known through FFA in high school. I learned about what Farm Bureau does and how it works. I discovered an opportunity. An opportunity to learn, to grow, and to be a part of something bigger than myself. Fast forward to October of the same year when a person I had met through the YF&R conference reached out to me about becoming a part of a YF&R committee. After a little convincing, and some consideration on my part, I thought “what the heck, why not?” The week after I was elected as one of the WyFB YF&R committee members of the Southeast District.

It has been two years since I was approached about running for a committee member spot on the YF&R state committee. Soon I will be running for reelection at our district Farm Bureau meeting. While I’ve been serving as a committee member, I have gained numerous valuable experiences. One of which is holding a leadership role in an organization that’s bigger than just my own farm. I’ve been able to not only be a part of something that benefits the whole state, but I’ve also been able to contribute to the direction that the Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation (WyFB) has had over the last two years. Working towards a common goal with other members around the state and knowing that we are making a difference in ways we wouldn’t be able to from our own individual farms and ranches, has been a highly rewarding part of being a committee member.

Cody Alps

Another great part of being a committee member is the chance to learn and connect with other members, whether it is with other people from around the state, or with other people from around the country. With the various statewide events and meetings we hold as a committee, there are many opportunities to connect with other members and to learn from each other. In March of 2023 I, along with other committee members from around the state, were lucky enough to be presented the opportunity to travel to Jacksonville, Florida, for the national American Farm Bureau YF&R convention. All in all, it was an amazing experience. One of my favorite aspects of the conference was how everyone that attended could connect in some way. In some instances, other Farm Bureau members in attendance lived states away, but were dealing with very similar issues. In other instances, it was a member from a neighboring state with a farm or ranch that was entirely different and unique to anything that we were used to from our area.

Another aspect of being a part of Farm Bureau that has been important to me is how it ties into my own farm and day to day life at home. There’s been instances where I’ve been able to implement and use what I’ve learned from other members on my own property. It’s also a constant reminder that what I’m doing while I’m working isn’t just about my own farm. There’s a much bigger picture that we are all a part of. However, sometimes life gets in the way. At times it feels like it would be easier to step away from outside responsibilities and focus just on the work that’s immediately around us. This year has been no such exception. Facing highly unpredictable weather, which has been more unpredictable than typical Wyoming weather it seems, constant breakdowns left and right, and other unforeseeable life events has given most people in our state plenty to juggle all at once. I would be lying if I said it was always easy to make the necessary adjustments and sacrifices for being apart of the Wyoming Farm Bureau and the YF&R these past two years, but I wouldn’t be lying if I said it was worth it every time. Being a part of YF&R and Farm Bureau as a whole certainly is a commitment, but rather than looking at that commitment as an obligation look at it as an opportunity and it will be exactly that. An opportunity.

The Opportunity of YF&R

BY CODY ALPS, WyFB Young Farmer & Rancher Committee Member

Develop your leadership and advocacy skills and meet other young farmers and ranchers from around the state and around the nation by participating in the YF&R Discussion Meet competition.

YF&R Discussion Meet Questions

1. Production agriculture requires a lot of capital. Young farmers and ranchers face challenges gaining access to the capital they need to start or grow their operations. What tools are currently available, and what new programs could be introduced, to help young people access financial resources—and make sound financial decisions—to run their farms and ranches?

2. Working with elected officials, in all levels of government, is critical to advancing public policy that supports farmers and ranchers. How can Farm Bureau help elected leaders better understand the challenges of the agriculture sector and the importance of supporting the financial viability of America’s family farms and ranches?

3. What is sustainable agriculture and how can Farm Bureau help farmers and ranchers access market-based solutions that advance sustainability goals without restricting their ability to stock America’s pantries, help feed a growing population and maintain farm profitability?

4. Farmers and ranchers across the country are diverse in not only the goods they produce, but also in the ways they raise and market them. Farm Bureau’s role is to broadly represent all producers. How can our organization further welcome and engage diverse agricultural communities and cultivate a dynamic future Farm Bureau leadership?

5. Agriculture uses water for everything from growing crops, raising livestock and moving products to and from farms and ranches. Water issues are often hotly debated, are unique to each region and can pose significant challenges to growers. How can Farm Bureau help address water management challenges and seek long term solutions for farmers and ranchers?

Collegiate Discussion Meet to be held February 2024

The Westminster College Young Farmers & Ranchers Discussion Meet competition will be held during the Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation (WyFB) Annual Meeting in Cheyenne on Friday, February 24, 2023. The state winner receives a $500 cash prize and an expense paid trip to the American Farm Bureau Federation (AFBF) Annual Meeting in January 2024 in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Being an advocate for agriculture is important and should be a part of everyone’s business plan.

National news updates

By Kelly Carpenter

WOTUS
On September 8, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) published the post-Sackett Waters of the United States (WOTUS) rule in the Federal Register. This rule does eliminate the significant nexus test, however leaving in its place is the test of relative permanence. The test of relative permanence doesn’t have any straight-forward temporal guidance for landowners, whether a stream flows for 90 days or 180 days or more, there is a lack of guidelines. This remaining uncertainty will continue to be a challenge for landowners.

Farm Bill
Farm Bill conversations are still under way. The strategy is to pass the legislation before the end of the calendar year to avoid any further delay that could be caused by the 2024 election year.

SGIT
Sage Grouse Implementation Team (SGIT) is working to finalize language for the state’s use in updating the Governor’s Sage Grouse Executive Order, in addition to then providing a Wyoming-developed alternative for the BLM’s consideration later in 2023/ early 2024 for their Sage Grouse management Draft EIS. The group is working on adding livestock grazing, invasive plant species, and predator language to provide updated management to, hopefully, preclude a listing of the Sage Grouse under the Endangered Species Act.

Rock Springs RMP
On August 18, BLM posted their Draft Environmental Impact Statement for the Rock Springs Field Office Resource Management Plan Revision. This revision has been in the works for over a decade and is of particular concern in south-west Wyoming for all public land users, from energy interests to agricultural users because half of the field office’s surface estate is proposed to be designated as Areas of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC). Nearly 1.8 million acres could fall under this designation if the preferred alternative is chosen. Locking up this amount of land for minimal to no use could have devastating local and statewide economic impacts. Additionally, much of the Field Office’s managed mineral estate will be closed to mineral leasing dealing another blow to the area and state economies. For more details, visit wyfb.org, click on the “Advocacy” tab and then the “Action Alert” tab.

The people of the Farm Bureau Federation

Meet the volunteer leader Lex Geer

County: Campbell
Farm Bureau Federation Leadership Position(s):
- Campbell County Farm Bureau Federation President
- Former WyFB YF&R Committee Member

Wyoming Agriculture: Describe ranch background.
Geer: I was raised on my family ranch south of Gillette. As a kid you could find me on a horse, 4-wheeler or working with my 4-H projects. I am the fifth generation to stay and work on the ranch and am currently working the ranch with my parents.

Wyoming Agriculture: Education, Hobbies and Other Background.
Geer: I have been married 16 years and we are blessed to have two kids ages ten and seven. My wife, Amanda, and I work on the ranch together. After high school I attended Northwest Community College and then Gillette College. I received degrees in animal science and welding which I use daily on the ranch. Over the years I have enjoyed welding for neighbors and creating ranch toys for my kids. This past year my wife and I have been learning a new hobby of building and flipping a house, which was built by my grandfather in the 60s.

Wyoming Agriculture: How did you get involved in Farm Bureau Federation leadership?
Geer: I got involved in Farm Bureau years ago when my grandfather, Bob Geer, asked me to attend a meeting. He had held every position on the board over the years. After attending meetings, I was nominated for secretary. Shortly after I was nominated for president and have been president since. I enjoyed serving on the board with my grandfather for many years before he retired.

Wyoming Agriculture: Why do you make the time to be involved in Farm Bureau Federation leadership?
Geer: I make the time to be a part of Farm Bureau to help educate the public about agriculture. Over the years I have enjoyed going into the classrooms to help teach our youth where their food comes from. I have involved my kids in those visits and the Farm Bureau meetings to help show them to take a stand and let your voice make a difference in the world.

Wyoming Agriculture: Can you share an example of a policy that has had a positive impact on your farm or ranch?
Geer: We have state land sections around our house and within our property. We appreciate the policy that helps keep hunters from crossing private property. This policy not only helps us by keeping unwanted traffic out of our pastures but also helps to keep our hunters and us safe by knowing who is within our properties with firearms.

Wyoming Agriculture: What advice do you have on how individuals can make a difference for Wyoming agriculture through the Farm Bureau Federation?
Geer: All membership dues go towards helping this federation fight for us. It helps get our team to the legislative meetings to help work with our local politicians and stand up for our policies. You as an individual are able to make or amend policies that directly impact you and your ranch. The Farm Bureau Federation helps give your voice a place to be heard.

Wyoming Agriculture: How important is each member of the Federation?
Geer: Every member is important to the Federation. Each membership trickles down the line from your grassroot ranch to the national level. At the end of the day every member stands together to help each other. The more numbers we have standing behind our policies gives us a louder voice.

WyFB Executive Vice President Ken Hamilton visited the U.S. Capitol and also met with Wyoming’s Congressional Delegation and staff in September. Hamilton testified at a Congressional Forum regarding ESA reform while in D.C. AFBF/Shelby Hagenauer photo.

He gave an example of the moving goal posts with wolves. “The initial recovery goal for wolves of ten breeding pairs in each of the three states was changed several times by the Fish and Wildlife Service,” he explained. “First the Service decided the 100 wolves in Yellowstone, which is primarily in Wyoming, should not count towards Wyoming’s population. Then they decided that another 50 wolves, or five breeding pairs, should be allowed.”

“Wyoming officials continued to negotiate with FWS and eventually reached an agreement that resulted in a proposal for wolves to be delisted for Wyoming,” Hamilton continued. “Of course, to no one’s surprise, this decision was immediately challenged in the courts – another concern for our members. It would be helpful if judicial review of these decisions could be limited.”

Hamilton also drew attention to the economic hardship ESA listings provide for landowners and urged the Working Group to consider the federal government stepping up with financial help.

He also urged the Group to see the importance of the FWS seeking partnerships with landowners. “Private lands are essential to many listed species,” Hamilton said. “Think how much more could be achieved if the federal government would seek to work with landowners rather than create hardships for them.”

“Our members typically live on the land they farm and ranch, and they work with a strong focus on both economic and environmental stewardship,” he continued. “Congress needs to step in and provide the framework that will allow partnerships to happen and not rely on the federal power to force landowners into situations which cost them money and possibly their farm or ranch,” Hamilton said. “This isn’t good for the landowners or the species.”

According to a memo from the Working Group, the group will make policy recommendations to Congress that reform the ESA to the benefit of both landowners and species. The memo identifies that the Working Group “will examine how the ESA is being implemented by federal agencies, the practical impacts on the American people, how litigation is driving ESA decision making, and how success is defined under the ESA.”

Wyoming Agriculture Classifieds
Dear Editor,

There appears to be general agreement that Wyoming’s current property tax structure is quite problematic. Where there is not agreement is in how to fix it. The current system, based predominantly upon real estate property values derived from recent sales, has escalated values inordinately higher than any time in the past. Assessors are then required to utilize such values when assessing property and thus estimate tax rates upon the same. This system is likely ‘survivable’ for the more affluent but is not sustainable for Wyoming’s producers and labor force. The question is how to fix it.

Two solutions tend to predominate current discussions; (A) Establish annual percentage increase caps, say in the 5-8% range. This softens the blow but does not address the cause of current increases, inflated property sales values. (B) Establish a budget based system in which all entities funded via property taxes must develop a detailed budget of their needs for the forthcoming year. The collective total of these is met by adjusting tax rates to raise sufficient funds to cover all budget needs. A quite tedious process that does not preclude inordinate increases without very detailed and effective oversight.

I am proposing an additional option that protects Wyoming’s producers and workers and addresses current drivers of escalating property values. This system would modify current property classifications dividing residential and commercial. It would also specify agricultural production enterprises and add one new classification. Value within each category would be based on a rolling average of values over the average ownership life of the property. The latter could be established from assessor, treasurer and/or clerk records in each county and then utilized to determine mean ownership periods on a statewide basis. For the sake of this letter, I will assign ownership periods based on limited conversations with banking, mortgage lending and county officials to illustrate how the proposal would work.

1. Commercial: Business entities providing goods, services or accommodations, would be valued on a rolling average of the most recent 8 years valuation.

2. Residential Property – Full time occupancy: Homeowners who reside in the home or have direct family members that do so continuously throughout the year would have values derived on an average of the last 12 years tax valuation (See #5)

3. Industrial and Manufacturing: Mineral extraction entities would predominate in this category. Their term of ownership would likely be driven by acquisition or merger resulting in changes of ownership. Manufacturers would include any business that utilized raw goods to produce a product offered for sale in commerce. Properties in this category would be expected to have a 16 year span of ownership.

4. Agriculture: All farm and ranch lands to include any and all residences on the same occupied by family members or employees. Employee housing might be occupied full time or on a seasonal basis. To qualify for averaging such properties must be in active production at levels consummate with the nature and scope of like operations in the area. Such properties cannot be held for speculative or development purposes. Conservation easements could qualify providing production levels are maintained. Estimated span of ownership for rolling average valuation would be approximately 24 year.

The above four categories, change of ownership would still provide for the same averaging as others in the category provided prior use is continued. Any residential home, including those on agricultural operations, offered as a rental unit would be assessed on a commercial basis.

5 The new classification: Residential Part Time and/or property held for speculation, development or any other nonproduction purpose. This would include any residence not occupied on a full time basis by the owner or their direct family members, any open farm or ranch lands taken out of production and held for investment, ‘conservation’, development or any other nonproduction agricultural purpose. All of the foregoing would not benefit from value averaging but would be subject to value and tax rates established by sales within the last year as is the case with the current system.

OK, somewhat of a different idea but in reality it just modifies the current system in the definition of tax categories and the means by which valuation is calculated. As with any new proposal, the devil is always in the details. To that end, it is hoped a working group might be formed to define steps that would need to be taken to be able to present a fully prepared plan to the Wyoming legislature for their formal consideration and implementation in 2024.

Jeanette and Nels Smith

September 1, 2023

Jeanette Rae Smith, daughter of George and Adelaide Keener, was born on January 20, 1938, in Newcastle, Wyoming. Nels Jensen Smith, son of Peter and Helen Smith, was born just over a year later on January 29, 1939, in Newcastle, Wyoming. They lived a full life, side by side, including when they left us to be with our Lord and Savior on September 1, 2023.

Together, Nels and Jeanette were pillars of their community, not only Crook County, but the entire state of Wyoming. They shared a love for ranching in the west and serving the Cowboy State, whether it was through politics and committees, or volunteering with local organizations, or just talking to friends, new and old where they would offer “suggestions” that made the world a better place. However, what they will be remembered for most is their unwavering love for each other and their family.

Nels and Jeanette’s lives will be forever cherished by their family: son Doug (Pam) Smith, son Garrett Smith, their seven grandchildren, four great-grandchildren along with Jeanette’s brother, Doug Keener and longtime friend Maureen Hill, and sister Sally (Patrick) Morton.

A private burial was followed by a memorial service on September 19, 2023 at Ranch A, Beulah, Wyoming.

In lieu of flowers, we ask that donations be made to Nels and Jeanette Smith Memorial c/o Isburg Funeral Home, PO Box 487, Spearfish, SD 57783 which will be presented to an Autism charity at a later date.

“I myself have learned so many things about ag helping during the Wyoming Needs Agriculture event,” Mollett said. “I didn’t grow up in ag so having the opportunity to share this information with others has been an enlightening experience.”

The photo frame opportunity completed the event by providing fans a chance to visit one-on-one with Laramie County Farmer and WyFB President Todd Fornstrom.

Sharing the “Wyoming Needs Agriculture” message continued during the University of Wyoming (UW) football game with the scoreboard video that played during the second quarter of the game. Goshen County Ranchers Skyler and Makenna Miller had a conversation with UW Athletics Broadcasters Keith Kelley and Kerin McKinney to share agriculture’s message with an even larger audience. Skyler is a former UW football player.

Farmers and ranchers, UW Collegiate Farm Bureau members and WyFB staff members combined forces to produce this great event. “This event is something that I look forward to each year, I have either participated or volunteered for the last seven years and each year it gets better,” Taylen Mollett concluded.
